Charleston Senior Care Event: Fall Prevention

When Already HomeCare opened in Charleston last September, they had two goals: to provide elite senior care and to enhance the lives of seniors in the community. Since opening, they have welcomed a number of new clients, and look forward to making a positive impact in the senior community by hosting free events on caregiving and senior living.

"We see ourselves as more than just another Charleston home care company," said Derek Bullard, founder of Already HomeCare. "We see ourselves as the community's partner in home care. We feel we have a responsibility to help senior citizens and their families live better lives."

Already HomeCare's first community event will be held on January 28th, and it will cover the impact of falls on older adults. The event is free to attend and will be held at the company's Charleston location, 1180 Sam Rittenburg Boulevard, Suite 240. Attendees who wish to attend should RSVP by January 24 by emailing area director Kristin Atkins or through their website.

"We chose to discuss fall risks during our first event because it is a big issue in today's society, and it is a topic that is commonly overlooked," said Bullard. "During the event, we will be sharing ways to prevent falls and providing caregiving tips for beginners. Through this event, we hope to teach everyone how they can make their home safer for their loved ones."

According to the Center of Disease Control and Prevention, one out of three adults over the age of 65 suffer from a fall annually. Seniors who do suffer from a fall are at a higher risk of severe injury, including broken bones, concussions and even death. Already HomeCare hopes that this event will help reduce this risk in Charleston and the surrounding communities.

"If we can just help one family avoid a fall and provide a safer environment for their loved one, this event will be a huge success," added Bullard. "If you are a caregiver or have a loved one who is at risk for suffering from falls, you are highly encouraged to attend this free event."
